After all, I have already discussed on this blog what is perhaps her most popular bird poem, and I have been a fan of Emily Dickinson's poetry since I was first introduced to it way back in high school. And the book, called A Spicing of Birds, has the added bonus of being illustrated by paintings and photographs by 19th century bird artists!

Review: A Spicing of Birds - 10,000 Birds

Birder lovers and poetry enthusiasts alike have a new hymnal to sing from to trumpet their passions. This small volume, entitled A SPICING OF BIRDS, combines the poetry of Emily Dickinson with the exquisite reproductions of eight naturalist artists who specialized in illustrating the birds that Dickinson wrote about. It is a superb combination.

More than twenty of the 220 poems that reference birds are poems dedicated solely to the birds' single symbolic selves. The most famous, of course, is "A Bird came down the Walk," written also in 1862. It's an unusual instance in that Dickinson herself enters this bird poem as a participant rather than simply an observer. She comes in late to offer
