We also see literacy as timely and essential as it relates to our second question, “why adolescent literacy in particular?” Research tells us that around grade four, students make the critical transition between “learning to read and reading to learn” (Chall, 2000, p. 99).

Why Adolescent Literacy Matters Now - HEPG

An essential question frames a unit of study as a problem to be solved. It should connect students' lived experiences and interests (their only resources for learning something new) to disciplinary problems in the world. And it should connect what they learn back to the real world, where they can put their new understandings to work.
