The first miles passed easily along wide, suburban boulevards with courteous drivers and a nearly deserted toll road. And then we merged onto one of Southern California’s notorious freeways. The most difficult kind of traffic for an RV driver — especially a new one — is what I call fast-and-busy traffic.

Normally, gates that “swing fully open” are my first recommendation to reduce the risk of accidents, since they don’t have any trip bars and are ALWAYS permanently-mounted gates. But if you need an extra-wide gate, the next best option will have a “swing-open” door that invariably comes with that pesky “trip bar.”
